Community Participation and Facilitation Techniques

Ms. Stephanie Grigsby, Principal, Design Workshop

Ms. Grigsby will provide an overview of community participation and facilitation techniques related to transportation and planning projects. The discussion will include a variety of community engagement tools, such as key pad polling and the chip game, and their use on projects being discussed in today's market. Ms. Grigsby will also provide techniques for increasing attendance and participation at public meetings and community workshops.

Biography: Stephanie Grigsby, RLA, AICP, received her Masters of Landscape Architecture from Utah State University and has been practicing landscape architecture in California and Nevada since 2000. As a certified planner she addresses both large, complex projects as well as detailed design. Applying her organization skills and attention to detail, she employs a comprehensive approach that is scalable to meet individual project needs. Most importantly, she is able to synthesize a broad range of information and develop an approach and solution that can be easily understood and implemented while also achieving innovative results.
